

New York City - Computer Integrated Services (CIS) announced today that CEO Dennis Gambow will be stepping aside, effective immediately, in order to pursue opportunities in his home state of Texas that would not require as much time away from his family. Dennis joined CIS in 2013, joining an organization that was in the midst of numerous impactful changes. In his relatively short tenure with CIS, Dennis successfully navigated a dynamic company landscape, aligned CIS to several large enterprise organizations, and completed two company acquisitions to bolster CIS' portfolio of service capabilities. Under Dennis' leadership, CIS has grown, and has been positioned for rapid growth and expansion in the coming years.

Following Dennis' departure, Todd Hershman will take on the role of President, will inherit Dennis' daily responsibilities, and will continue in his role leading the sales and business development team. Todd is one of the original co-founders of CIS and has been at the helm of the organization's sales team and responsible for the firm's manufacturer relationships, as well as helping define the company's direction and vision. Todd looks forward to continuing to grow CIS into a significant national player in the Systems Integration market. CIS will continue to lead the field in areas such as Identity and Access Management, Cloud Migrations, Network Security, Devices and Deployments, and IP Telephony implementations as well as CIS' robust MSP offerings. Under Todd's leadership the company's long-standing credo: "It's All About the Client" will continue to emanate and drive CIS' culture.

Headquartered in New York City, Computer Integrated Services is a systems integration firm providing services for organizations of all sizes throughout the world since 1995. For additional information please visit www.cisus.com.